Obituary

Ruby Lee Walton was born June 3, 1942 to the late Jacob and Lucy Brown in Cincinnati, OH. Her family relocated to Cincinnati, Ohio before she was born, transitioning them all from country farm life to city living.

She met and married her husband Major early in life at the age of seventeen, and bore two daughters: Deborah (deceased at age 41) and Dianna. Her southern influence and hospitality were best expressed in her great love of cooking. Her homemade buttermilk cornbread, mustard-turnip greens, potato salad, fried pork chops, and peach cobbler were so good they could provoke you to slap someone! The recipe for her signature dish—macaroni & cheese—was (and still is) coveted by many.

Ruby loved taking care of her girls when they were young...ribbons, bows, and rarely a hair out of place. She instilled in her daughters the importance of getting an education, and she and Major saw to it that they did just that as both girls graduated college in their respective fields of study. She held a career as a Nurse Assistant for several years with The Christ Hospital which she enjoyed and took great pride in.

Ruby had two other daughters that she considered her own, Hannah and Anne Scott. Their life with "Aunt Ruby" began as a baby-sitting favor but gradually evolved over the years into a semi-permanent live-in situation. Although they were not their biological children, she and "Uncle Major" raised Hannah and Anne right alongside their own girls, giving them all equal shares of love and affection.
